Today we will discuss:

In today's session, we explore how companies can meet the growing expectations for high-quality, investor-grade sustainability disclosures by strengthening their systems, processes and controls. We'll discuss how the ISSB Standards support a structured approach to collecting, managing and verifying sustainability data—drawing from real-world experience across corporate reporting functions. We'll cover:

- How concepts like materiality, faithful representation and verifiability apply in practice when designing disclosure systems;
- The convergence of sustainability and financial reporting cycles, and how internal controls and governance frameworks (e.g. COSO framework) can be leveraged;
- The challenges of fragmented systems, inconsistent data definitions and reliance on estimates or proxies—and how companies are working to overcome them;
- Insights from preparers, accountants, auditors and standard-setters on what's working, what's evolving and what's needed next.
